

What is a dead hedge and why have one?

Arvon Road Allotments – N5 1PR 130m x 50m – 31 plots and a hectare of woodland

5 compost bins – 3-6-month turnover

Why is a dead hedge a good idea?

- Piles of branches and twigs arranged to form a barrier which are increasingly used as a way to dispose of the material that arises from thinning or clearing operations in woodlands.
- Excellent habitat and corridor for wildlife.
- Recycle-reuse biomass without energy use to transport to landfills, or by burning, reducing a carbon footprint impact.
- For us: minimising the amount of un-compostable stuff being put in the compost bins

Filling and compressing the hedge

Branches

Tough stems e.g. sprouts, hollyhocks, brambles, broad beans, cardoons

Perennial weeds and their roots e.g. bindweed, couch grass, nettles

Christmas trees....etc

Result: a 6-ft high barrier blocking the view of the woodland from the boundary fence, and using up all our waste material that will only rot slowly
